

Transition words

In the society, after school many people join a company. I think students and employees have many similarities and differences. First, they both get knowledge. For instance, students who want to be lawyer study laws, and lawyers still study new laws. However, students just know the knowledge; lawyers learn it and use it in their life. Moreover, students and employees both work for the future. For example, some students study to have a good job; some employee work to become a CEO. Furthermore, they both have work to do. For instance, students have to do homework and employees have to meet the target of company. Also, students and employees both get different things from work. For example, students get knowledge from homework, but employees get salary from work. To summarize, students and employees are similar because they both learn knowledge, both work for the future and both have to work, but they are also different. Such as students just learn the knowledge, but employee learn it and use it in their life; students work to have nice job, but employees work to become CEO; students get knowledge from homework, but employee get salary from work.

topic
sentence

3
reasons

Summary/
conclusion

Sentence (use "for example")

$$88 + 4 = 92$$